(ST. LOUIS LAW SCHOOL)

1911

Of the one thousand and sixty graduates of St. Louis Law School, including the class of 1910, one hundred and thirty-seven are known to have died. No doubt others, of the sixty-eight whom we have been unable to trace, have also died. The names of these sixty-eight are assembled by classes at the end of the catalogue in the hope that each alumnus will look over the list, and if he knows of the present address and occupation, or of the death, of any of the missing, he will send us the information. As a rule, in making up the catalogue, inquiries have been made of the members of the several classes concerning the respective classes only. It may well be that graduates know about members of other classes than their own, concerning whom our information is lacking. Send us such information if you can. More than seven hundred letters have been received in response to our inquiries, and such cordial interest is now thankfully acknowledged. We feel that the time has perhaps now come when the Alumni Association should see to the issuing of future catalogues. This matter could be put in the hands of a committee or a corresponding secretary of the local organization. We have no doubt that the work would also be more thoroughly done. It would be very desirable to have a catalogue containing more detailed information. For instance, many of the graduates have in the past held judicial and other positions who are in this catalogue listed simply as practicing at a certain address. Of those who have passed away, such items of information would be most appropriate. Some members have made contributions to the literature of their profession. All such additional information would add very much to the interest of a catalogue.

So many of the graduates are non-residents of St. Louis, that it has been thought proper to give here some view of the present condition of the school and of its present location. For the latter purpose, since the school has finally been placed on the general University campus, along with several other departments of the University, pictures of all the principal University buildings standing there have been printed here. They will speak for themselves. The Law School is comfortably housed temporarily in the University library building, occupying all of the second floor and the north half of the first floor. When a special building is erected for the school, it will no doubt be in keeping with the unsurpassed architecture shown in these pictures.

As to the school itself, its library equipment is steadily improving, having, for instance, in the most important class of books, reports, those of all the States and all Federal, and also the most important English reports. These are kept up to date.

Of the Faculty, three give their whole time to the work, but a number of courses are still cared for by practicing lawyers. The course was extended to three years in 1904. The requirements for admission now are one year of college work in addition to a high school education.

The School of Fine Arts

The School of Fine Arts (the St. Louis School and Museum of Fine Arts) is handsomely installed in a building on the southeast corner of the University campus, in easy walking distance of the St. Louis City Museum of Art. The School offers the most thorough systematic training in the different branches of fine arts, and the students have unusual advantages by reason of the large University collections and those of the city.
